was as if Brunhilde had decided of a sudden to go in for girlishness. Yet this resistance of ours lasted as long as dew in sunlight. It was a slim, thrilling lovesick girl who stood in that moonlit balcony not many minutes later. And yet the kind of gushing, fluttering April youngness that is in the Juliet of our remembrance—the birdlike Juliet that must seem tragfically misplaced in the net of circumstance that snares her—of all this, the
